Hera was conceived as a premium, eco-conscious skincare line built to launch in Kenya with a framework for global expansion. The brief called for something rare in the category: a truly unisex brand, rooted in organic, handcrafted products, with a positioning strong enough to travel across cultures from day one.

Insight.

Most skincare brands compete on ingredients and results. The opportunity for Hera was to compete on feeling — to build the brand around a single emotional truth: that caring for yourself is the first act of caring for the people you love. That insight needed a name and a mark that could carry it honestly, in more than one language and more than one market.

Intervention

Naming & Verbal Identity:

Named the brand "Hera" for its dual resonance — the Luo word for love, rooting it in its launch market, and the Greek goddess of love and protection, giving it instant cross-cultural legibility. Paired it with the tagline "For the ones we love," positioning every product as a gesture of care that starts with yourself.

Brand Mark & Palette:

Designed a merged dual-profile mark — two faces resolving into one — to carry the unisex positioning at a glance. Built the palette around black and green for organic, premium depth, with gold and white as luxury accents chosen for legibility against the darker base.

Retail & CX Design:

Mapped the full boutique journey end-to-end: walk-in arrival and amenities, consultation and treatment flow, a referral protocol for fully booked slots, and a structured post-visit follow-up — extending the brand from product into service.

Deliverables ↗

The engagement produced a complete, launch-ready brand architecture for Hera — from naming and visual identity through to a fully mapped in-store customer journey, giving the brand a scalable foundation for entry into the Kenyan market and beyond.

Brand Blueprint — mission, vision, verbal identity, naming, and tagline.

Visual Identity System — logo mark, colour palette, typography, and packaging direction.
